Sport Specific Information

When and where did you begin this sport?	She began fencing at age seven at the Sabre au Clair club in Lyon, France. Her potential was soon noticed by the national training hub [Pole Espoir] in Orleans, France, which led to her joining the Cercle d'Esgrime Orleanais club and eventually the National Institute for Sport, Expertise and Performance [INSEP] in Paris, France.
Why this sport?	"I was doing taekwondo and dancing but I didn't enjoy them. A friend of mine then suggested I try fencing. What attracted me at first - and it's kind of funny - was the sort of disguise you get to wear. I was the only girl at the fencing club, and I loved it. I was supposed to try handball the next day, but I never went. I was a timid girl, and I felt like behind the fencing mask I could just let go. It's such a complete sport - technical, physical and tactical. I think I was lucky to start with the sabre, I'm not sure I would have had enough patience for the other weapons."

Superstitions / Rituals / Beliefs	"I created a routine with my mental trainer to put myself in a kind of bubble and try to put myself into combat mode. Often, we have a ritual in competition where we are invited to go into a waiting room and then out onto the piste with our referee and our opponent. In that room, I do my little mental warm-up routine and a little physical warm-up to wake up my body and my mind." (le-medias-blog-de-julian.over-blog.com, 27 Feb 2021)

Other information	TRAINING SWITCH After the 2020 Olympic Games in Tokyo, where she claimed a silver medal in the team event and a bronze medal in the individual event, she decided to quit the National Institute for Sport, Expertise and Performance [INSEP] in Paris and relocated to Orleans, France, where she joined the Christian Bauer Academy. "Winning an [individual] medal helped me to boost my confidence because I was waiting for it since a long time, either at the Games or at the world championships. However, after finishing the Games I decided to change it all and switched both training centre and coach in order to try to start all over again, erase my habits and look for something bigger." (loiret.fr, 20 Mar 2023; lefigaro.fr, 21 Sep 2022)  FENCING COUPLE After the 2020 Olympic Games in Tokyo she married fellow French sabre fencer Bolade Apithy. The pair train together at the Christian Bauer Academy in Orleans, France. "We don't speak [about fencing] when we are at home because it is important to separate things. We already train together. But, what is true is that I wouldn't be able to do everything I do without him. At the [2020 Olympic] Games in Tokyo, between my defeat in the semifinals and the time to get back to the piste for the bronze medal, he was the only person who managed to motivate me again and make me smile. Every time I'm in doubt I call him. He is my life coach." (olympics.com, 08 Dec 2023; lefigaro.fr, 21 Sep 2022)  IMPROVEMENT AT OLYMPICS She finished in fourth place in individual sabre at the 2016 Olympic Games in Rio de Janeiro. She then won individual bronze and team silver at the 2020 Games in Tokyo, and put the improvement down to increased maturity. "When I get touched now, I don't react like before. I manage my emotions better. I feel like what I have done on the piste since the [2016] Games frightens my rivals more. I have improved technically and tactically a lot. When I came home with my two medals, I looked at them and said to myself, 'Finally, I want even more'. I want to relive those moments already and feel the adrenaline when you enter the track and the emotion when you get on the podium." (sportmag.fr, 21 Dec 2021; dicodusport.fr, 02 Apr 2021; larep.fr, 12 Jun 2017)  PSYCHOLOGIST In 2022 she sustained an injury to her right shoulder while competing at a World Cup event in Tunis, Tunisia. She required surgery, and during her recovery her coach Christian Bauer suggested she see a psychologist. "It was tough to be back to training so fast [after the injury] and the training was so harder than before. I struggled to get motivated to go training to the point that my coach, feeling I was about to become depressed, sent me to a psychologist. I felt so tired I even struggled to put on my competition vest. There was no longer this happiness when you say that you love fencing. So I decided to be well supported every day until [the 2024 Olympic Games in] Paris." (eurosport.fr, 10 Nov 2022; lefigaro.fr, 21 Sep 2022)
